JACQUES COUSTEAU

Jacques-Yves Cousteau was born in Saint-Andre-de-Cubzac, France, on June 11, 1910. He always loved the water and became fascinated with machines and cinema in his early teens. Later in life, Cousteau blended these childhood loves with a passion for filmmaking and became one of the best-known personalities of the 20th century.

After high school, Cousteau entered the Ecole Navale (Naval Academy) in Brest and in 1933 he joined the French Navy as a gunnery officer. It was during this time that he began taking underwater explorations and worked on designing a breathing machine for longer dives.

When World War II hit, Cousteau spent time as a spy and was awarded several medals. In 1943, he and French engineer Emile Gagnan perfected the aqualung (SCUBA), which allowed a diver to stay underwater for several hours at a time. This breakthrough invention was used by divers to locate and remove enemy mines after the war.

Years later, Cousteau retired from the navy and purchased the famous ship Calypso to continue his explorations, financing his trips by producing numerous films and publishing many books on oceanography. His films include The Silent World (1956) and World Without Sun (1966), both of which won Academy Awards.

Cousteau was asked to create a TV series in 1958 and for the next eight years, he introduced the public to a world of sharks, whales, dolphins, sunken treasure, and coral reefs on his show, The Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau. In 1985, he was awarded the Medal of Freedom by former U.S. president Ronald Reagan.

Jacques Cousteau died on June 25, 1997, but during his career he did more to bring the world's natural wonders into our homes than did any explorer in history. He was also able to fulfil one of his life-long dreams: to increase public awareness about the fragile beauty of the sea.
