Driverless Car

Think long and hard before taking your driving test! It might no longer be necessary...

Almost all car manufacturers are working on the same project: the autonomous car. With this car, you will just need to program the distance to be covered on a satnav* and the car will take you where you want. Some people think that no longer being obligatory how to drive is scary. However, most errors are human and depending 100% on using driverless technology could well reduce the number of accidents.

This innovation also allows handicapped people or people who can hardly see to travel independently. In addition, if necessary, the person inside the car will be able to set the manual mode and take control of the steering wheel and the pedals.

In the USA, three states allow the first autonomous Google cars to circulate but within very limited areas. In addition, somebody must walk in front of the vehicle in order to avoid traffic jams and accidents.

Who knows! In 30 years' time, most people could be using driverless cars!

a) Are cars going to disappear?

Cars are not going to disappear because (there isn't a substitute yet / they are necessary / they are easy to use / the car industry can't close down).

b) In a city, do you prefer to get about by car or by bike?

I prefer to get about by car because (it's faster / it's not so tiring) / (I work and my clients would be surprised to see me riding a bike / it's...).

I prefer to get about by bike because it's (more ecological / cheaper / faster to get to places...).
